

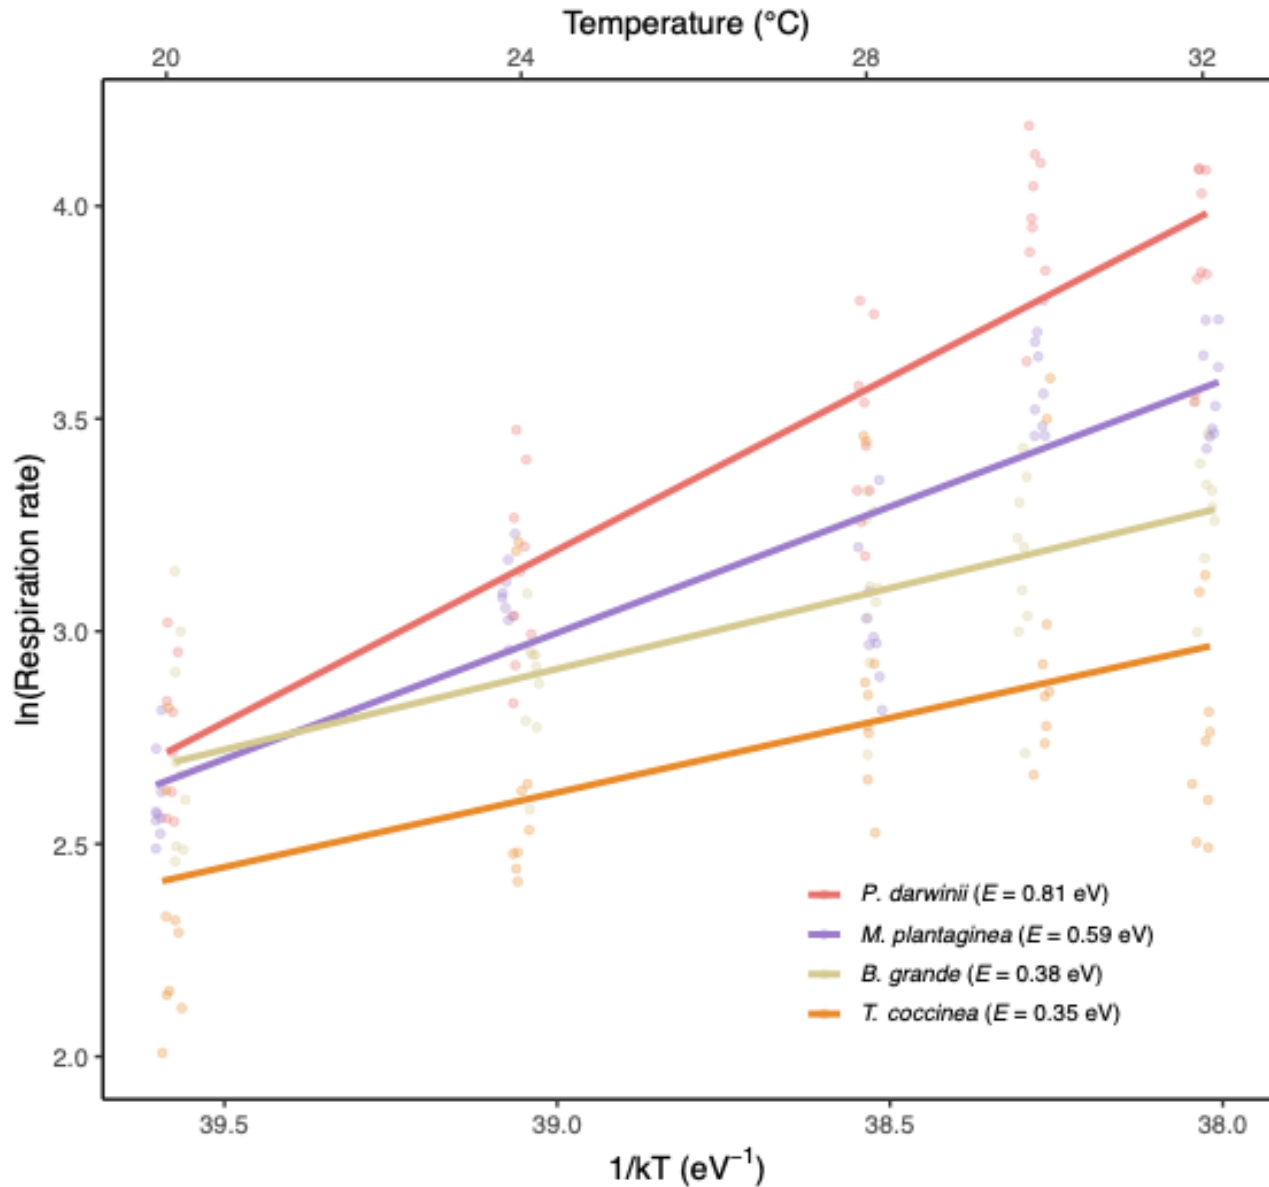

Fig. 3. Arrhenius regressions of dark respiration rate against inverse absolute temperature ($1/kT$) for four Galápagos cnidarian species across the shared rising portion of the thermal response (20–32°C). Points show individual replicate measurements; lines are species mean regression slopes. Steeper slopes indicate higher activation energy (E) and greater thermal sensitivity. The top axis shows corresponding temperatures in °C.